Charges had yet to be framed and the prosecution proposed examining 124 witnesses. India’s Supreme Court granted regular bail to Subodh Agarwal, Dinesh Goel and Mahendra Prakash Soni in Rajasthan’s Jal Jeevan Mission case. The judges treated the allegations as serious and examined whether further detention served a purpose after the investigation concerning the three appellants had concluded. Paragraphs 8–14.

The challenge to the bail refusals

The three appeals arose from the same Anti-Corruption Bureau FIR, registered on 30 October 2024. The prosecution alleges that firms obtained contracts using forged experience certificates with assistance from senior officials. It invoked the Prevention of Corruption Act and Indian Penal Code offences including conspiracy, forgery and criminal breach of trust by public servants. The Rajasthan High Court had refused regular bail in separate orders in August and September 2026. Paragraphs 2–5.

What tipped the balance

The State relied on the scale of the alleged wrongdoing and the claimed breach of public trust. The bench treated gravity as a factor in the bail inquiry and weighed it against the stage of the case. The investigation relating to the appellants was complete, the record ran into thousands of pages and the trial had yet to frame charges. The prior release of several co-accused also mattered. The Court found that continued custody would serve no useful purpose on those facts. Paragraphs 6–12.

The bench set aside the High Court's refusals for these three appellants and directed their release on bonds and conditions fixed by the trial court, unless required in another case. The appellants must attend the trial unless exempted, and unjustified defaults or breaches can lead to cancellation. The bench expressly left the allegations and evidentiary issues for trial. Paragraphs 13–17.
